Hope by Dr. Judy Ivey

Life is full of changes! How do we redistribute grief and pain in our lives to find hope? What is hope? Webster defines hope as "feelings of confidence and expectation – to look forward to something with the expectation that it will happen and believing it will happen". Hope is an invisible promise of the things that will come. The promise is held tight in your hands with belief connecting them together. It becomes an unbreakable life-line that reaches to a goal. It is hope that holds this line of purpose in your life tight so that you can become secure. Hope is found by rising above daily circumstance to higher levels of believing and living. As we become transformed beyond ourselves, we are able to experience life at new levels of belief and understanding. Hope is a continuing life process as we empty our negative aspects of self and replace them with this promise.

So how do we get hope? Hope is having trust at the very beginning even when you can't see the results.

Hope is working with your mind and attitude. Tell yourself something good is about to happen. Expect and look for things to come true. Say out loud what you want to have. For example, "I want to improve my relationship" or "I will try to listen more than speak".

Hope is connecting the dots as you go, even when the next dot is unknown. Continue in a pattern of expectation to believe positive results will come.

Hope is not letting yourself doubt. Confusion or disbelief will talk you out of what you are thinking or doing to create a negative mindset.

Hope is looking at yourself with the ability to change. It resists a sluggish lifestyle and removes things holding you back from change.

Hope is believing that the invisible can be factual – let your heart and inner strength convince your mind.

Hope alerts you of the anxieties and fear that deter, threaten, and discourage you. You must stand strong against anguished worries - think with wisdom.

Hope matches your heart, mind, walk, vision, and faith so you are able to carry yourself as a stable and healthy individual.

So why bother to change and rearrange?

Hope is the gift for today and tomorrow. It builds courage and an internal place to go to when life has done you wrong. It helps each of us to heal. Hope is God's gift for you to create a better you, a 'you' with greater capacity.
